Conflict of Interest Disclosure Policy

As an organization, we strive to maintain the highest standards of integrity and professionalism among our employees. One critical aspect of this is ensuring that no employee's personal interests conflict with their professional responsibilities. To achieve this, we require all employees to disclose any outside financial interests they may have on a yearly basis in writing. This disclosure must be submitted annually, as part of the Employee Performance Review Cycle Policy, which outlines the procedures for evaluating an employee's performance and identifying areas for improvement.

The purpose of this annual disclosure is to ensure that no employee's personal interests could potentially influence their professional decisions or actions. By disclosing these interests, employees can help prevent conflicts of interest from arising in the first place. However, if an undisclosed conflict is discovered later, it will be grounds for disciplinary action, as outlined under the Anti-Harassment and Workplace Conduct Policy. This policy emphasizes the importance of maintaining a safe and respectful work environment, and failure to disclose a conflict of interest can compromise this.

It's essential that employees understand the gravity of this requirement and take their annual disclosure seriously. Failure to comply may result in disciplinary action, up to and including termination of employment. Employees are expected to be transparent about any outside financial interests they have, including but not limited to investments, business relationships, or other personal affiliations that could potentially impact their professional decisions. By working together to maintain the highest standards of integrity, we can ensure a positive and productive work environment for all employees.
