

Employee Equipment Provisioning Policy

Employee equipment provisioning is an essential aspect of our company's operations, and as such, we have established guidelines to ensure that all employees receive the necessary tools for success while minimizing unnecessary expenses and environmental impact. New hires will be provided with a fully provisioned laptop within 5 business days of their start date, which includes all necessary software, peripherals, and accessories. This provision is in line with our company's commitment to supporting employee productivity and well-being, as outlined under the 'Employee Wellbeing Initiative' policy.

As employees use company-provided equipment, they are expected to adhere to the guidelines set forth under the 'Business Travel Authorization Procedure', which includes requirements for secure data storage and transmission. Employees must also be mindful of their personal digital footprint when using company devices, as this is closely tied to our Whistleblower Protection Policy, which emphasizes the importance of maintaining confidentiality and protecting sensitive information.

When an employee's employment with us comes to an end, they are required to return all company-provided equipment within 14 days. This includes laptops, smartphones, tablets, and any other devices or accessories provided by the company. Failure to comply with this requirement may result in additional deductions from the employee's final pay. It is essential that employees understand their obligations under this policy, as it helps us maintain a secure and efficient IT infrastructure.

In addition to these guidelines, employees are expected to report any damage or loss of company equipment to the IT department promptly, as outlined under the 'Damage or Loss of Company Property' policy. This ensures that we can take prompt action to mitigate any losses and minimize disruptions to our operations. By following these guidelines, we can ensure a smooth transition for new hires and maintain a positive working environment for all employees.
