

Employee Performance Review Cycle Policy

The Employee Performance Review Cycle Policy outlines the procedures for evaluating employee performance on a regular basis, with the goal of fostering growth, development, and accountability within the organization. Formal performance reviews are conducted twice yearly, in January and July, to assess an employee's progress against their job expectations and goals. During these reviews, managers will discuss the employee's strengths, weaknesses, opportunities for improvement, and areas of success, as well as set new goals and objectives for the upcoming review cycle.

As described under the Procurement and Purchase Approval Procedure, employees are expected to adhere to all procurement guidelines and regulations when ordering supplies or services. Similarly, during performance reviews, managers will assess an employee's ability to meet organizational expectations in this regard, including their adherence to company policies and procedures. Additionally, managers must document at least one development goal per review cycle, which may include training, mentorship, or other opportunities for growth and improvement.

The Business Continuity and Disaster Recovery Plan also plays a critical role in the performance review process. In the event of an emergency or disruption, employees are expected to be able to continue performing their duties effectively, as outlined under this plan. During performance reviews, managers will assess an employee's ability to adapt to changing circumstances and maintain productivity in the face of unexpected challenges. By evaluating these aspects of an employee's performance, managers can identify areas for improvement and provide targeted support to help them succeed.

Overall, the Employee Performance Review Cycle Policy is designed to promote a culture of accountability, growth, and development within the organization. By regularly assessing employee performance and providing feedback and guidance, we aim to create a work environment that is supportive, challenging, and rewarding for all employees.
